

Overview: A short but strenuous hike with historical significance, the Stonewall Creek hike takes visitors up to the top of a ridge-line with magnificent views of the Lincoln valley below. The trail begins just off FS Road 607 F1, crossing Stonewall Creek almost immediately before climbing through several meadows and thickly wooded areas. Be prepared to get your feet wet, as the trail intersects several more small springs and streams on the way up the ridge. The trail curves westward and climbs steeply for nearly a mile before reaching the top of the ridge, which offers incredible views of the valley and Stonewall Mountain. The trail itself was once used as an old supply route for the miners of Copper Camp, where tons of copper ore was collected and shipped off for smelting across the country and beyond. It is still possible to hike down the opposite side of the ridgeline and past the Copper Lakes to the old mining camp, but be advised the trail is not been maintained for many years.

Map and Trail Guide

Stonewall Creek Trail (#485)

Directions To Trailhead: From Lincoln take MT-200 West towards Missoula approximately 1.3 miles to Beaver Creek Road #44106. Turn right and continue onwards for about 2 miles until you reach a fork in the road; stay to the left on Rd. #44106 and drive for another 2.8 miles to the junction with the Park Cr. Road #607. The Pine Grove Campground is located near this junction as a reference. Follow Rd. #607 4 miles to Road #607 F1, located on the left hand side of the road immediately after crossing Stonewall Creek. For low clearance cars, it is recommended that you park here and walk down the road to the trailhead, as the road is very rough. The trailhead is marked with a wooden sign at the top of a short side road, and all other vehicles should park here. This is an unimproved trailhead with no amenities other than signs.
